

INclusion and Diversity in EARly childhood education

Emerging challenges in society, such as changes in gender roles or influx of families from war regions, reflect on both families and their children from their earliest age. In this sense, childcare professionals have a pivotal role to create an inclusive and welcoming environment for every child regardless of their background (country of origin, possible traumatic experiences, beliefs in the family, etc.).

The project INDEAR aims at promoting inclusion and diversity in childcare institutions by equipping professionals with the knowledge and skills needed to address recent societal trends.

HOW?

Self-Assessment Tool

Enabling childcare professionals to assess their knowledge, skills and attitudes in the context of inclusion and diversity.

Upskilling Course

Enabling childcare professionals to address the topic of culture, trauma, and gender identity and sexual orientation.

During our 1st Transnational Project Meeting in Cham (Germany), partners were engaged in a peer session aimed at exchanging ideas and experiences related to three main project topics: culture, gender identity and sexual orientation, and traumatised children.

What is the definition of the topics in terms of early childhood education? What competences should childcare education professionals have to address these topics? What experience do partners have related to these topics and what challenging situations did they face related to them? Those and many more questions were in the focus of our discussion and the basis for further development of the assessment tool and the course.
